The script, though unconventional, is remarkably well-crafted, and the approach of combining twists with a traditional screenplay has worked perfectly well to create a fun and watchable film. The film revolves around three Mumbai friends, Arshad (Imran Khan), Ronnie (Kunaal Roy Kapur), and Utkarsh (Vir Das), who are about to bid farewell to their home-town, and get ready for another adventure of a lifetime. Soon, however, their journey towards freedom takes an unexpected turn when they cross paths with Zoya (Shenaz Treasury), a bubbly and vivacious young woman. Akshata Kumar, who can be seen on the cover of the book in the film, does a terrific job and I think this is her best performance till date. She brings down the house with her endearing humour and energy, and the rest of the cast is made up of relative newcomers, so they make the most out of their roles. Hats off to Abhinay Deo and Akshat Verma for having the courage to take the risk and for executing the screenplay in the most unconventional manner.
